The Corrections Field Needs Talented Professionals Like You

Nationwide, there are over 3,000 local jail facilities and over 120 federal correctional institutions. It's estimated these institutions facilitate care for nearly 1 million individuals.²

The supervision, counseling, and rehabilitation of both juvenile and adult offenders as well as community corrections, probation, and parole are important priorities for our society. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, America will need more than 17,000 correctional officers between 2014 and 2024.³ A bachelor's degree is often a requirement for employment in federal prisons and for probation officer and correctional treatment specialist positions.⁴

One Degree Can Prepare You for a Wide Range of Careers.

The corrections industry boasts numerous career choices in a variety of public and private sector fields. With a Bachelor of Science in Corrections, you may qualify for employment opportunities related to adult and juvenile treatment and rehabilitation, corrections counseling, parole, probation, child protective services, sexual abuse response, juvenile justice, or law enforcement.

Graduates can use their degree to advance in police departments, seek careers in federal and local correction facilities, or pursue contractual jobs in the U.S. military. In addition, a bachelor's degree from Kaplan University could help you pursue work in these environments:

- Federal, state, and local government agencies and organizations
- Police departments (additional academy training usually required)
- Corrections (prisons and jails)
- Juvenile justice
- Correctional administration

Possible Career Opportunities and Day-to-Day Activities:¹

- Law enforcement position (police officers and detectives; additional academy training is usually required)—Pursue and apprehend individuals who break the law, and issue citations and warnings or make arrests; work to keep the peace and protect the public.
- Corrections officer—Maintain security and inmate accountability to prevent disturbances, assaults, and escapes; enforce rules and regulations.
- Correctional treatment counselor—Help counsel and rehabilitate adult and youth offenders who are incarcerated within federal, state, or local prison facilities.
- Youth corrections case worker—Provide guidance and counseling to youthful offenders so they remain viable contributors to society.
- Probation officer—Gather information about offenders' backgrounds by talking to offenders, their families and friends, and other people who have relevant information.

Note: Local, state, and federal correctional/probation officer jobs and law enforcement positions may require additional training or education including additional state-approved higher education beyond Kaplan University's degree. You should fully research the requirements of any such position you intend to seek prior to enrolling in your program.

A Strong Foundation Starts With a Specialized Education

Kaplan University's corrections program is designed to build a strong foundation of professional skills and relevant knowledge to enable you to specialize in your area of interest. You can choose courses from several different areas of focus including law enforcement, inmate treatment and rehabilitation, investigation, corrections, and adult or juvenile justice. Along with courses on these topics, this degree program features a pool of open electives that allows you to choose courses from inside and potentially even outside of the corrections area in subjects such as legal studies, public administration, and information technology. A capstone project at the end of the program gives you the opportunity to apply your new knowledge and skills to real-world criminal justice scenarios.

The program focuses on the following knowledge and abilities:

- An overview of the U.S. criminal justice system, its agencies, and the issues and challenges facing the system
- Theories of criminology including causes of crime and discipline-specific evaluation of human behavior
- Analytical skills such as the ability to use scientific methods of inquiry to arrive at reasoned decisions
- Criminal justice leadership practices including the role of organizational culture, behavioral theory, planning, and community relations
- An overview of how new technology is used in criminal justice, criminal enterprise, and in the operations of criminal justice agencies
