Careers in Finance Are Projected to Be Careers in Demand.

According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, financial analysts may experience employment growth based on the increasing complexity and global diversification of investments, as well as the growing amount of assets currently being managed. Employment of financial analysts is expected to increase by 12% between 2014 and 2024.¹

Personal financial advisors may also experience faster-than-average job growth during the same time frame, as large numbers of baby boomers approach retirement and seek planning advice.²

Earn a Master's Degree and Prepare to Go Further.

A master's degree is often required for advanced financial analyst positions,¹ and can help improve a personal financial advisor's chances for promotion.²

The Master of Science in Finance is designed to prepare you to pursue opportunities in finance and insurance establishments such as banks; finance companies; security dealers; credit unions; for-profit and nonprofit businesses; and federal, state, or local government agencies.

Possible Career Opportunities:³

- Personal Financial Advisor²
 - Evaluate the financial needs of clients
 - Help clients identify and plan for long- and short-term financial goals
 - Create retirement plans
- Financial Examiner⁴
 - Monitor the financial condition of banks and other financial institutions
 - Review balance sheets, operating income and expense accounts, and loan documentation to confirm institution assets and liabilities
- Financial Analyst¹
 - Provide guidance to businesses and individuals making investment decisions
